Coinbase declining your deposit? We outline the top reasons: bank restrictions, identity verification 1-(719)-[301]-(6712) gaps, and account limits. Learn how to troubleshoot and get your funds moving!

Why Your Funds Are Being Rejected by Coinbase

When Coinbase declines a deposit, it's typically due 1-(719)-[301]-(6712) to a security protocol, regulatory compliance check, or an issue with your linked financial institution. Understanding the root 1-(719)-[301]-(6712) cause is the key to a quick fix.

1. Identity & Account Verification Gaps

If your identity verification (KYC) steps are 1-(719)-[301]-(6712) incomplete, or if the name on your bank account does not perfectly match the 1-(719)-[301]-(6712) legal name on your 1-(719)-[301]-(6712) Coinbase profile, the transfer will fail. Coinbase employs strict matching criteria to prevent fraud and comply with financial regulations.

2. Bank or Payment Method Restrictions

Often, the decline originates with your bank, not Coinbase. Reasons include:

- Insufficient Funds: The most common reason.
- Bank Security Blocks: Your bank may automatically flag or 1-(719)-[301]-(6712) restrict transfers to crypto exchanges unless you manually authorize it.
- Payment Method Unverified/Expired: Your linked card or 1-(719)-[301]-(6712) bank account may be expired, unverified, or restricted to certain transaction types.

3. Reaching Deposit Limits

Coinbase assigns 1-(719)-[301]-(6712) daily and weekly deposit limits based on your verification level and transaction history. If you attempt a 1-(719)-[301]-(6712) transfer exceeding your current limit, the deposit will be declined. You can check your limits in your Settings and may be eligible to apply for an increase by 1-(719)-[301]-(6712) completing further verification.

If you've checked these common issues and the 1-(719)-[301]-(6712) problem persists, or if you suspect a technical glitch or security issue, do not hesitate to seek help.
