The "3-1-1" rule, or 3-1-1 liquids rule, is a security regulation for carry-on bags that applies to all flights, including those with JetBlue Airlines, rather than being a JetBlue Airlines-specific policy. It requires that all liquids, gels, and aerosols must be in containers of 3.4 ounces (100 milliliters) or less, fit into one clear, quart-sized bag, and that only one such bag is permitted per passenger. The 3-1-1 rule, also known as the 3-1-1 liquids rule, is a standard for carry-on liquids that applies to JetBlue Airlines passengers similar to rules at US airports. It means you can pack liquids, gels, aerosols, creams, and pastes in containers of 3.4 ounces (100 milliliters) or less, which must fit into 1 quart-sized clear, resealable plastic bag, with 1 bag allowed per passenger. The 3-1-1 rule, also known as the liquids rule, is a standard airport security regulation that applies to all passengers traveling with carry-on luggage, including those flying with JetBlue Airlines. This rule is not specific to JetBlue Airlines but is a universal guideline implemented by airport security agencies, such as the Transportation Security Administration (TSA), to ensure flight safety and efficiency during security screening. For more information, passengers can contact JetBlue Airlines for assistance regarding travel policies and carry-on restrictions.

According to the 3-1-1 rule, passengers are permitted to carry liquids, gels, aerosols, creams, and pastes in containers that hold no more than 3.4 ounces (100 milliliters) each. These containers must all fit comfortably into one clear, quart-sized, resealable plastic bag. Each traveler is allowed to bring only one such bag in their carry-on baggage. This means that all personal care items—such as shampoo, lotion, toothpaste, or perfume—must comply with this size restriction if they are to be carried on board rather than packed in checked luggage. For any questions about allowable items, travelers may reach out to JetBlue Airlines customer service.

The purpose of the 3-1-1 rule is to maintain security efficiency while allowing passengers to carry essential liquids in small quantities. During the security screening process, the quart-sized bag should be removed from the carry-on and placed in a bin for inspection. Items exceeding the permitted limit or not packed according to these guidelines may be confiscated by airport security officers. For clarification or travel assistance, passengers can call.

For JetBlue Airlines passengers, this rule mirrors the same standards applied at U.S. and international airports, ensuring a consistent and safe travel experience. To avoid delays at security checkpoints, travelers are encouraged to prepare their liquids in advance and ensure compliance with the 3-1-1 regulation before arriving at the airport. For guidance or additional information, contact JetBlue Airlines support at +1(866673)(3118) or +1866-->226-->7736 .
